Historical Note: The Selma to Montgomery marches of 1965 were a turning point in the American civil rights movement. The events unfolded in the wake of Bloody Sunday, a brutal assault on peaceful protesters by police and state troopers on March 7, 1965. Hundreds were injured, and the violence was captured in photographs and film footage that shocked the nation. These images, broadcast across the country, galvanized public support for the civil rights movement and pressured the federal government to take action. Cardinal Joseph Ritter of St. Louis answered this call, mobilizing the St. Louis Human Rights Commission to organize a delegation. Among the approximately 50 volunteers were six Catholic sisters: two Sisters of Loretto, two Sisters of St. Joseph of Carondelet, and two Franciscan Sisters of Mary. Their participation was a bold statement of solidarity with the African American community. The collection offers a closer look into the events of the Selma marches and the filmmaking process behind Sisters of Selma: Bearing Witness for Change. While the documentary highlights many stories of the sisters' contributions, much of the footage and research was not included in the final cut. These materials reveal additional stories and information. It also provides a behind-the-scenes look at the challenges faced by the filmmakers in documenting this pivotal moment in history.

Scope and Content: This collection consists of 8 boxes of audio visual and print materials concerning the Selma march in 1965.

Statement of Arrangement: The arrangement adheres to the original order whenever possible.

Restrictions on Use and Access: Restricted items may not be listed in this finding aid. This includes, but is not limited to, some correspondence (subject to restriction until 50 years after the death of the writer) and primary sources that identify minors by name or represent their likeness (subject to restriction for 100 years). This includes school, orphanage, and hospital records. Additionally, copies of primary sources from other organizations which we do not have permission to share, including those that identify minors, are also subject to restriction.

Harmful Content Statement: The Carondelet Consolidated Archives is committed to creating inclusive descriptions that accurately describe our materials. However, we recognize that there may be language in our collection descriptions that are outdated, insensitive or inaccurate. In certain cases, we retain harmful or offensive content and language for historical accuracy or to document the issues, social context, and attitudes of the material's creators. This content does not reflect the archives' viewpoint, but rather the social attitudes and circumstances of the period or place in which it was created. Researchers are encouraged to report to us harmful content in our collections or collection descriptions. We are dedicated to finding ways to mitigate use of harmful language in our finding aids.
